DIED AS THE CROWD CHEERED HIS MUSIC

Alessio Played "The Holy City" on Cornet, Sat Down and Passed Away.

NEW YORK, September 2.—More than a thousand persons crowded around the band atand at McComb's Lam Park, the lionx, yesterday afternoon, to hear Frielding Eand give its consert. The feature of the program was Joseph Alessio's cornet solo. The Holy City. When the cornetist, who had become a great favorite with the music lowers, walked to the front of the stand, he received applause. He always played well, but yesterday he seemed to put his whole soul into his work. There was not a sound from the crowd as the final played. For a moment after he firstled there was allence, then applause, which hooks into cheering. Alessio bowed and returned to his seat at the rear of the stand.

The cheering continued, and the band leader motioned to his seat at the rear of the stand. This did not satisfy the audence, however, and it took up the hand-clapping and cheering anew. Then the band leader again motioned to Alessio to give an encore. The man who was sitting next to the cornetist noticed that the man's eyes were closed and shook him.

Alessio pitched forward and fell to the floor, It was thought he had fanted, and a physician said Alessio had died of anopiexy. The musician was forty-ning very non-union man, and the cars were tied up.
